The term "interface" refers to the surface of contact between two objects. It also denotes the graphical state presented on a display screen. In physical chemistry, an interface is the boundary between different phases of matter. The existence of different cosmic spaces between individuals also creates a diverse array of bodily interfaces in an intangible way. This phenomenon interweaves the relationships between people and all things across parallel universes, multiple universes, and a single universe, illustrating how inherent existence is manifested within unstable interfaces.
