JILLIAN HARRIS (Dance)

September 2022: Co-choreographed and performed At the Mercy of the Storms, an original duet created in collaboration with Assistant Professor Xiang Xu, at Temple's Cherry and White Access Gala, The Met, Philadelphia

October 2022: Selected Presenter at the National Dance Education Organization Conference (Atlanta, GA) on "The R.E.A.L. Method." This experiential workshop introduced a new visual model and method for embodying and transforming movement material. R.E.A.L., developed by Harris, represents Relational Embodied Active Learning. Informed by research in interpersonal neurobiology, cognitive science, and learning theory, this model comes to life through an incremental process that involves improvisation and collaborative choreography. The approach is highly adaptable to a wide range of populations and settings. It is grounded in the belief that learning is a creative act, involving problem-solving, choice-making, interpersonal connection, and enhanced awareness. Providing tools for breaking habitual movement behaviors and expanding personal agency, the method makes visible the enactive nature of consciousness.

December 2022: Completed PADI Open Water diving certification (Curaçao) in anticipation of a new dance film project involving underwater cinematography.

ADAM VIDIKSI (Music Studies)

Adam Vidiksis' music was performed frequently throughout the world this fall, including in several important international concerts. Vidiksis returned to Tokyo this past September for a performance at the International House of Japan with composer Gene Coleman and traditional Japanese instrumentalists Akikazu Nakamura, shakuhachi, and Sansuzu Tsurzawa, shamisen. This piece, entitled Dream of Emptiness, was the culmination of the neuroaesthetic research he began for a project slated for the 2020 Olympics by the Japan-US Friendship Commission, featured on NPR's All Things Considered. His collaboration dance video with Cyrian Reed, Melanin Vibes, was presented with live music performance by Vidiksis and others at the Accademia Filarmonica Romana in Rome, Italy. His music was performed at a concert at Spectrum NYC this October. With his trio, SPLICE Ensemble, he premiered a new work commissioned by the group in collaboration with composer Paula Matthusen at the Ammerman Center Symposium at Connecticut College. This work is based on continuing research he and his SPLICE colleagues and Mattusen have been doing at the Mammoth Caves in Kentucky with support from the National Park Service. He also performed with faculty colleague trumpeter Sam Wells at Boyer's Cybersounds concert series, which he and Wells curated. This spring, Vidiksis will have several notable performances: at the Temple Global Conference here in Philadelphia, at UC Riverside in LA, at Columbia University's Institute for Ideas and Imagination in Paris, France, at the SEAMUS National Conference in NYC, at the University of Utah in Salt Lake City, and at the Berklee College of Music and Dance. Vidiksis is continuing his research in neuroaesthetics and generative music this spring, with preparations for several future projects coming this summer and next academic year. Faculty member Sam Wells and Vidiksis recently launched a duo project under the name aeroido. Their first project under this moniker will be presented in Yokohama, Japan this February. Vidiksis is currently involved in four albums as a drummer and/or electronicist that are in various stages of post-production that will be commercially released this year.
